Theses and Dissertations (Electronic and Print)

Prior to 1999, the University of Georgia Libraries accepted only print theses and dissertations. Binding services were provided to students above and beyond the two copies (one for the Main or Science stacks and one for the Georgia Room) that had to be submitted to the Libraries. In 1999, the University of Georgia’s Graduate School began accepting electronic theses and dissertations (ETDs). At that point in time, students could choose to submit either a print or an electronic version of their thesis or dissertation, but not both. Beginning with the Fall Semester of 2001 theses and dissertations were required to be submitted in electronic format and the Libraries no longer provided binding services for students who would like to have a print copy of their thesis or dissertation bound.

Since the Fall Semester of 2001, print copies of theses and dissertations have not been systematically added to the collection when an electronic copy exists. However when a bound thesis or dissertation is offered as a gift, it may be added to the collection at the discretion of any bibliographer or the Head of the Georgiana Collection to replace a copy that is fragile, damaged, or lost, or to supplement the electronic version. Normally the Libraries should only hold two copies of a thesis or dissertation: either two print copies or a print copy and its electronic version. Print copies dating from 1999 to the present that are added as gifts will become part of the Georgiana Collection.

For added copies of UGA theses and dissertations which do not have an electronic copy (i.e., those prior to 1999), added copies will only be added to the Georgiana Collection upon approval of the head of that collection, or to the stacks, upon approval of the appropriate bibliographer.

All added copies of print theses and dissertations will be cataloged for the Georgia Room, but will be sent directly to the Repository to be housed with the other Georgiana Collection theses and dissertations. The temporary location of Repository should not be added to the item record of any added copy so that its location and item type (Special Permission) will remain consistent with the other Georgia Room thesis and dissertations located at the Repository.
